I want to divide the raster into grid blocks of 25km x 25km. In this case, I have 20 rows (grids) with the largest elevation of the DEM. Each of these grids should be extracted as a raster block. I have tried using the following code, but it fails due to the raster being only 10 metres high. This code fails for the following error: ERROR 1: Area to crop must be greater than zero. The code: arcpy.env.workspace = r"F:\MyPath\test.gdb" inputRaster = r"F:\MyPath\test.tif" outputRaster = r"F:\MyPath\test_out.tif" # Process: Extract Boundary (with optional field and operation) arcpy.gp.ExtractByAttribute_sa(in_raster=inputRaster, out_layer="",

In my EF Core DbContext, I have a POCO that looks like this: public class Foo { public int FooId { get; set; } public string Name { get; set; } public string Bar { get; set; } public Bar BarObject { get; set; } } Where Bar is some other DTO object. Since Bar is a navigation property, I can access it via the base object, as I would normally access Foo.Name: var foo = context.Foos.First(); var name = foo.Name; However, if I use foo.Bar, then it'll fetch the whole object from the database and it'll be slower because it has to look up the relationship for that property. Is there a way I can tell EF Core to just return the Name property and ignore the Bar property? A: You can mark your Bar property with the [NotMapped] attribute to do what you want. public class Foo { public int FooId { get; set; } public string Name { get; set; } [NotMapped] public string Bar { get; set; } public Bar BarObject { get; set; } } Which causes EF Core to ignore the property at compile time and only use the property you want when you actually try and access it. var foo = context.Foos.First(); var name = foo.Name; var bar = foo.Bar; I'd advise against this though as if you introduce a change to the model (eg add a new property to Bar) it will result
