Two patients with primary breast carcinoma were treated with hexamethylmelamine at a dose of 2.5 mg/kg every six weeks. The first patient, with stage IIIA (T2N2M0) breast cancer had already undergone a previous mastectomy and subsequent treatment with chemotherapy. In the follow-up study, a marked reduction of tumor size was observed. The second patient was diagnosed with stage IIB breast cancer and subsequently underwent a radical mastectomy and axillary dissection. For the first time, this patient received hexamethylmelamine prior to surgical therapy. Her clinical course was followed by radiographs and pathologic examination.Q: Performance on IPC I have created a simple library to accomplish IPC between two programs. The client code looks like this: #include "SharedData.h" int main(){ SharedData shared; shared.setValue(100); while(1); } The SharedData class is defined as: class SharedData{ private: int value; public: void setValue(int val){ this->value = val; printf("value = %i", this->value); } int getValue(){ return this->value; } }; In the shared library is the following piece of code: int SharedData::getValue(){ return this->value; } int SharedData::setValue(int val){ printf("getValue(this->value) = % 3e4e8ef8d
