The 19-year-old Cuban infielder signed a seven-year contract with Boston that includes a $31.5 million guaranteed bonus Friday. The deal also includes an option for the 2019 season. Moncada, who defected from Cuba in August, signed with Boston hours after getting the financial bump up and the team's blessing for his signing. "I want to say, I'm not a kid anymore, but I'm happy to be in Boston," Moncada said through a translator. "Happy to be here. I'm ready for everything." The Sox had reportedly offered

Moncada more than $1 million per season, and Boston already is getting $31.5 million back from the $31.5 million he will make for the next seven seasons. The additional $500,000 in incentives means Moncada will earn an additional $11.5 million in the first three years of his contract. "You hear stories, a lot of things about big money, but it's never been really seen," Red Sox owner John Henry said. "It's not a barometer of success or failure. But it's a good sign that our young man from Cuba is going to be a part of our club. And the rest will come down to how good he is. And that's his job." The move moves the Sox closer to filling their second base position with Red Sox general manager Mike Hazen saying Moncada's signing is the team's top priority this offseason. After Mike Napoli, who has long been rumored to be on the move, and Dustin Pedroia, the team will be a switch-hitter at second base as well as the corner outfield spots. "It's going to be great having him here," said Red Sox manager John Farrell. "His enthusiasm, his 1d6a3396d6
