Identification of a novel repressor of methanol-induced transcriptional activation in the basidiomycete Ustilago maydis. Methanol is a major product of the decomposition of lignocellulosic biomass and accumulates in the atmosphere during the conversion of atmospheric CO₂ to liquid fuel. Methanol is oxidized to CO₂ and water by most microorganisms including the filamentous fungus Ustilago maydis. In this work, we used a methanol-inducible expression system based on the methanol-tolerant ptp promoter of the U. maydis ptp1 gene and observed a statistically significant increase in the level of the RNA transcript when cultures were supplemented with 1.0% methanol. This increase was repressed when the ptp1 gene was deleted and we have shown that this repression is exerted through a mechanism involving transcriptional attenuation. In addition, we have sequenced and mapped the entire ptp1 transcript. Using this information, we have selected the fragments of this transcript that are responsible for the repression and compared their sequences to known internal ribosome entry sites (IRESs) and other known RNA elements of the U. maydis genome. This analysis showed the presence of two previously uncharacterized regions with homology to the IRES elements from the pea chlorotic mottle virus RNA genome. Further experiments have shown that these regions are responsible for the methanol-repressed expression of the ptp1 gene. These two regions are part of the ptp1 transcript 5' region and encode four copies of the 35 amino acid sequence located at the C-terminal portion of the alpha subunit of translation initiation factor eIF-2. Taken together, our results show that methanol downregulates the ptp1 gene expression by interfering with the recognition of the mRNA at the translation initiation stage through the action of a novel eIF-2alpha-related RNA element located in the 5' region of the ptp1 transcript.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a microwave component, and more particularly 3e33713323
