Chickenpox is a contagious viral disease that can be spread through contact with someone who has the rash, such as during a raucous classroom party, or by contact with contaminated "fomites" like food or toys. It can cause small, hard fluid-filled blisters on the skin that burst and scab over. The virus typically begins with a high fever, followed by a low fever. Children experience a higher fever that usually resolves in 24 to 48 hours. To combat the spread of chickenpox, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) recommends that you protect yourself and others against the disease by staying away from others if you have skin blisters. It is also essential that you get the chickenpox vaccine. The chickenpox vaccine is made from a weakened virus, usually of the virus, to protect you or someone else against the disease. The vaccine is typically given in three shots with a month between each shot. Side Effects of the Vaccine Prior to getting the vaccine, you are asked to sign a form that states that you're aware of the potential side effects of the vaccine and that you understand what they are. One of the most common side effects is a mild reaction known as measles-like rash. This is known as
