The two programs are incompatible with each other, so if you start out with a full copy of Photoshop, you'll have to delete or pay for a license for Elements. * **GIMP**. Although built by a different company, `_GIMP_` (GNU Image Manipulation Program) is a free, open-source, cross-platform tool for altering images that runs on Unix/Linux and Windows operating systems. Some people confuse GIMP with Photoshop because of the similarities between the two programs. In fact, GIMP is now considered a successor to the original PS, and is completely separate from the Photoshop brand, although the GIMP website does make reference to PS as well. * **The Interface Builder**. The price of playing big is elusive anywhere on earth. The price of playing big is elusive anywhere on earth. The likes of England's lumbering Kevin Pietersen and the athletically gifted Andrew Strauss can make $800,000 a year. South Africa's AB de Villiers, fit and strong as a horse, can make $6 million. The best Indian spinners can all make close to $2 million a year. Yet once in a while, you get a glimpse of the market price. When Chris Gayle struck two sixes in an over-by-over spell in the ICC World Twenty20 final, it took India's Twitter army to make it a meme and keep the price rocketing. When South Africa won the 2009 World Twenty20 final at South Africa, Virat Kohli's helmet-to-helmet collision with Jacques Kallis produced enough blood to sell some souvenirs. And when Chris Gayle twirled alone through the air to score 37 in the Indian Premier League (IPL) final in 2008, he produced enough bodies for a pop-up game of chicken at the ground where he was batting. The cost of Gayle the player was raised from $150,000 to $400,000. The $4,000 difference came from Twitter. What can be broadly said from these examples, though, is that while the cost of Gayle the player in the IPL is dwarfed by that of Pietersen and Strauss, it comes from a very different financial universe. In the case of Gayle and Kallis, the financial universe from which the money is flowing is built on passion, hope and dreams. In the case of Pietersen and Strauss, the source of the money is cold hard cash. The rise of IPL cricket, which means the net worth of Gayle comes from a T20 league instead of from a County Championship, has meant the financial universe is now much more fluid. In the past, you were cast in the universe that was before IPL or big international cricket, and if the money wasn't flowing there, you would have no chance of getting it. Gayle's IPL contract had a buyout of $400,000. Chances are, it was more or less what the player himself made in the last few years in county cricket. To qualify as a 'big' player in the domestic game, even now, you would have needed to make at least three times that
