Please note that some materials on our website can not be used on mobile devices. People use it to communicate globally, whether in their workplaces or in their homes. The flexibility it offers is the reason people use it even though many of them don't realize how powerful and effective text messaging can be. Text messages can be quick and convenient way to send a message to anyone but also offers more options for reaching a target audience. As the number of SMS options grows, it's important to learn the basics of text messaging before sending messages. Sending texts can be done from many different devices including mobile devices, landline phones, and voice-over IP phones. Sending text messages can also be done using the internet. Texting basics Before sending a message, there are a few things that the sender must be aware of. The majority of SMS service providers allow for an unlimited number of texts to be sent. After reaching this limit, the sender must be upgraded to a higher plan with a different provider. There are plans that range from $0.50/day, $3/month, to $7.00/month with some providers. The sender must also have the recipient's phone number and the phone will be signaled so that it is ready to receive a text. Most phones have a "read" button that will notify the phone of a new message. Once the phone receives the text, the text is highlighted, the sender's number is displayed at the top of the phone, and the sender is notified that the recipient is waiting for the text. Most mobile providers support several mobile phone models, so it's important to understand that not all mobile phones are SMS capable. Mobile phone providers may recommend certain phone models to use. It's also important to know that cell phone companies may charge different fees to text numbers in the United States than they charge in other countries. A commonly used feature of phones is the ability to screen calls. This feature allows a phone to "ring" without an incoming call. When you select the number, your phone will play a message for the call. By default, the screen display will display the number on the line. However, you can choose to have the number hidden from the user. When a user is attempting to call you, this can be an annoyance, especially if the person has dialed a lot before reaching your phone. Texting while driving can be dangerous for many reasons. If you're sending a text message while driving, you should make sure you're using the
