the course wont be offering the coursework itself until next fall (after everyone takes the course), but we will have a contest to have the best blog post on the blog. the contest will involve a prize for the best post (donated by offensive security) and bragging rights to the top of the leaderboard. one final thing. you may have noticed that i mentioned several times that offensive security offers this course as a video course. i hope you find that its much easier to consume a video, but i will mention that there are some great benefits to the more traditional classroom format. if you are attending the course, you will be given some pre-study materials to help you prepare. the first day of class will be devoted to reviewing those materials as well as getting you up to speed on the course itself. the second day of class will be devoted to executing the exercises, but you will need to be prepared to do a dry-run on each exercise at least a few times. this ensures youre not wasting your time when you get to the live lab. you have been given access to all the materials from the course. you will be asked to do everything we do in class and the lab. if you do not have the lab access, you will need to work on your own. you will be required to create a script that will solve each exercise given to you. the script will be the equivalent of the lab exercises. your lab is yours to do what you want, but we strongly encourage you to take advantage of the lab hours. we will review any work you submit, but you are welcome to submit any work in any format. the final step in this section is to score the exam using the exam engine. the exam engine is a great free service that you can use to take your owasp test or the exam for this course. youll find that the exam engine is quite simple to use and has an easy to follow interface. you can configure all sorts of response options and display options and the score engine will give you a score based on the configuration you choose. if you have the skills to score your own exam, you can also get your own custom score for $20, which is a great option.

the rest of the course is dedicated to walking you through how to create and deploy a backdoor using the tools that youve learned. its pretty much a walk through of how to create a backdoor using a given backdoor model and how to deploy it. there are usually several techniques available in each of the models, so youll need to pick the one thats most effective for you and write it up. ive made plenty of mistakes along the way, but this was one of the biggest. my goal in writing this course was to be really clear about the specific concepts i was teaching. i wasnt aware of the online quiz i had put on my site until i was preparing for the oscp review. while i figured out how to get it to work, i had no idea what the score was or how it was calculated. to make matters worse, my first attempt at the quiz was a 2 out of 10 or worse (now i know how i did). so its a big ol quiz at the end of the course. this is a textbook case where i could have added a section to the course to mention the quiz, but i felt like the quizzes purpose was to help you practice for the exam. in any event, after youve learned everything from the course, it should be fairly easy to answer the questions. and im glad i wrote the quiz because i know that i wouldn’t have felt confident enough with the material to write the answer to the questions on my own. i got a 30/30 on the course and i’m proud of that. that kind of score is typical of those who have reached a level of mastery with the material. if youve ever been interested in earning an oscp, i can suggest a practice exam similar to the one i used. for more detailed information, you can also check out the official pwb v 30 contest. 5ec8ef588b
